BACKGROUND

The significance of the role played by Public Enterprises in any country, particularly in the developing ones, can hardly be overemphasized. Public enterprises, as a form of business organisation have attained a great deal of significance in recent times. The primary objective of the establishment of public enterprises is to serve the public at large and to create employment opportunities. Across the globe, public expectations and priorities are changing and along with it, the need to proactively and dynamically adapt new practices and technologies. Over the years, the gamut of Public enterprises in India has undergone a phenomenal growth both in terms of numbers and volume of investments. Restructuring of PSEs to make their operations competitive and viable on a long term and sustainable basis has been a focus of the Governments over the last few years.

The purpose for which a public sector enterprise is set up is primarily for the welfare of both the workers and the society. Hence, the performance of the public sector enterprises cannot be evaluated in terms of the criteria used to judge the performance of private sector enterprises. The basic difference between private and public ownership is the difference in objectives, namely, welfare maximization by the public sector and profit maximization by the private sector.

Creation of employment opportunities has always been a key point of focus for the PSEs. However, over the years certain other concepts like Corporate Governance, CSR, Sustainability, and technological innovation & best practices have steadily established themselves as key factors in mapping the credibility of public enterprises. Even with increasing global competition, many of the Indian CPSEs have carved out a niche for themselves and established their brand equity in the global space.

We are happy to represent the 12th PSE Excellence Awards at New Delhi; which would be preceded by a conclave to take note of the way forward in making Indian PSEs an even better force to reckon with in terms of national and international benchmarking.
